Byron assists clients on the FERC-regulated aspects of developing, owning, and operating wholesale electric generation, energy storage, and electric transmission assets.

Prior to joining Rock Creek, Byron spent over 17 years at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), where he advised Chairmen Willie Phillips and Rich Glick and Commissioner Allison Clements on key policy matters, including transmission and interconnection reform, organized electric market formation, grid-enhancing technologies, and corporate matters. Byron also held senior leadership roles in FERC's Office of Energy Market Regulation and Office of Electric Reliability, specializing in market-based rates, corporate mergers, and reliability standards. He brings this comprehensive regulatory background to Rock Creek Energy Group to help clients navigate wholesale power markets and policies.

Byron lives in Maryland with his family. When he is not keeping up with his young children, he enjoys watching sports and reading.
